Understanding the Two Chicago Style Systems

Chicago style, formally known as The Chicago Manual of Style (CMOS), offers two distinct citation systems: the Notes-Bibliography system and the Author-Date system. Both are widely accepted in various academic disciplines, but their application can differ significantly. It is imperative to ascertain which system your instructor or publisher requires before you begin formatting your essay.

The Notes-Bibliography System

The Notes-Bibliography system is favored in the humanities, particularly in literature, history, and the arts. This system uses numbered footnotes or endnotes to cite sources within the text, followed by a comprehensive bibliography at the end of the paper.

The Author-Date System

Conversely, the Author-Date system is more prevalent in the social sciences and sciences. It employs parenthetical in-text citations that include the author's last name and the publication year, supplemented by a reference list at the end that details all cited sources.

General Formatting Requirements for Chicago Style Essays

Adhering to general formatting guidelines is fundamental to presenting a professional and compliant Chicago style essay. These specifications ensure consistency and readability across academic papers.

Margins and Spacing

Chicago style mandates specific margins and line spacing to maintain a clean and organized appearance. Consistent application of these rules enhances the overall presentation of your work.

Margins: Generally, one-inch margins should be used on all sides of the page (top, bottom, left, and right). This provides ample white space and allows for annotations if necessary.

Line Spacing: The main body of the text should be double-spaced. This includes both the text itself and block quotes. Footnotes and endnotes, however, are typically single-spaced, with a blank line separating individual notes.

Font: A standard, readable font such as Times New Roman, Arial, or Garamond in 12-point size is recommended.

Page Numbers

Exclusion: The title page is typically not numbered, though the numbering begins with the first page of the main text.

The Notes-Bibliography System: In-Text Citations and the Bibliography

The Notes-Bibliography system requires careful attention to the creation of both in-text citations and the final bibliography. The accuracy and completeness of these elements are paramount.

Numbered Notes for Citations

When using the Notes-Bibliography system, every source used must be cited with a superscript number in the text corresponding to a note.

Placement of Superscript Numbers: These numbers should follow punctuation marks, such as commas, periods, or question marks. For example: "This idea is central to the author's argument¹."

Footnotes vs. Endnotes: You may choose to place your notes at the bottom of each page as footnotes or collected at the end of the paper as endnotes. Both are acceptable within Chicago style, but consistency is key. The first citation of a source will include full publication details, while subsequent citations of the same source can be shortened.

Building the Bibliography

The bibliography is a comprehensive list of all sources cited within the essay, presented in alphabetical order by the author's last name.

Format: Each entry in the bibliography includes specific publication information formatted according to Chicago style rules, which vary slightly depending on the source type (book, journal article, website, etc.).

Content: The bibliography provides complete bibliographic information, allowing readers to locate the original sources.

The Author-Date System: In-Text Citations and the Reference List

The Author-Date system streamlines in-text citations, making them more concise while relying on a detailed reference list for full source information.

Parenthetical In-Text Citations

Instead of numbered notes, the Author-Date system uses parenthetical citations directly within the text.

Format: The standard format is (Author Last Name Year, Page Number). For instance: (Smith 2020, 45).

Attributive Tags: You can also integrate the author's name into the sentence, followed by the year and page number in parentheses: As Smith argues (2020, 45), this concept is vital.

No Page Number: If citing the entire work or a general idea, the page number can be omitted: (Jones 2019).

Constructing the Reference List

The reference list mirrors the bibliography in purpose but is organized alphabetically and uses the author-date citation format.

Order: Sources are listed alphabetically by the author's last name.

Details: Each entry provides essential publication details, though the specific format for different source types will align with Chicago's author-date conventions.

Formatting Your Title Page in Chicago Style

While not always required, a title page is often a component of Chicago style essays, especially for longer or formal papers. Its structure is specific.

Essential Title Page Elements

The title page should clearly present the essay's title, your name, the course information, and the date.

Title: The essay title should be centered on the page and typed in title case (major words capitalized).

Author's Name: Your name, also centered, typically appears a few lines below the title.

Course Information: The course name and number, instructor's name, and submission date are usually listed together, often aligned to the left or centered, a few lines below your name.

Crafting Your Chicago Style Bibliography or Reference List

Whether you are using the Notes-Bibliography system or the Author-Date system, the final list of sources requires meticulous attention to detail. The goal is to provide complete and accurate information for every source you have consulted.

Key Components of Source Entries

Each entry in your bibliography or reference list will typically include the author's name, the title of the work, publication information (city, publisher, year), and potentially other details like page numbers or URLs.

Author's Name: For books and articles, the author's full name is provided. For the Notes-Bibliography system, the last name comes first in the bibliography; for the Author-Date system, it also comes first.

Titles: Book titles are italicized, while article titles are enclosed in quotation marks.

Publication Details: For books, this includes the city of publication, the publisher, and the year. For articles, it includes the journal title (italicized), volume and issue numbers, and the publication year.

URLs and DOIs: For online sources, including the URL and/or DOI (Digital Object Identifier) is crucial for easy access.

Variations in Source Types

The specific format for entries will vary significantly depending on the type of source being cited. Common source types include books, journal articles, magazine articles, newspaper articles, websites, and interviews. Always consult the latest edition of The Chicago Manual of Style for precise formatting for each specific type.

Common Pitfalls to Avoid in Chicago Style Formatting

Navigating Chicago style can present challenges, and several common errors can undermine the quality of your paper. Being aware of these pitfalls can help you avoid them.

Inconsistent Citation Practices

One of the most frequent mistakes is inconsistency in how sources are cited. Whether you are using the Notes-Bibliography or Author-Date system, ensure that every citation follows the same format. This includes the precise placement of punctuation, capitalization, and the inclusion or exclusion of specific information.

Incorrectly Formatted Notes or References

Errors in formatting notes or reference list entries are also common. This can range from misplacing commas and periods to italicizing or quoting titles incorrectly. Always double-check the specific requirements for each source type.

Neglecting Page Numbers

For direct quotations or specific paraphrased ideas, failing to include page numbers in your citations is a significant omission. This prevents readers from easily locating the exact information within the source material.

Mismatched In-Text Citations and Final Lists

A critical error is when in-text citations do not correspond to entries in the bibliography or reference list, or vice versa. Every source mentioned in your text must appear in your final list, and every item in your final list must be cited in your text.

Title Page and General Formatting Lapses

Overlooking the requirements for the title page, margins, or spacing can detract from the professionalism of your essay. While these may seem minor, they are essential for adherence to academic standards.

FAQ

Q: What are the main differences between the Notes-Bibliography and Author-Date systems in Chicago style?

A: The primary difference lies in how in-text citations are presented. The Notes-Bibliography system uses superscript numbers that correspond to footnotes or endnotes, while the Author-Date system uses parenthetical citations with the author's last name and publication year. The final lists also differ: a bibliography for the former and a reference list for the latter.

Q: Do I need a title page for a Chicago style essay?

A: A title page is not always mandatory for Chicago style essays, but it is often required for longer papers, theses, dissertations, or when specified by an instructor. If a title page is used, it typically includes the essay title, author's name, course information, and submission date, all formatted centrally.

Q: How should I format block quotes in a Chicago style essay?

A: Block quotes, generally considered to be over five lines of text, should be formatted as a separate, indented paragraph. They do not use quotation marks at the beginning or end, and the parenthetical citation or footnote/endnote number follows the punctuation at the end of the quote. The block quote itself should be single-spaced, with a double space above and below it.

Q: What is the standard margin and font size for a Chicago style paper?

A: The standard margin for a Chicago style paper is one inch on all sides (top, bottom, left, and right). For font, a clear and readable typeface such as Times New Roman, Arial, or Garamond in a 12-point size is recommended for the main body of the text.

Q: How do I cite a source that I found online using Chicago style?

A: Citing online sources in Chicago style depends on whether you are using the Notes-Bibliography or Author-Date system. Generally, you will include the author, title of the specific page or article, website name, publication or last updated date, and the URL or DOI. For online books, the format is similar to a print book, with the addition of the URL.

Q: Is there a difference in formatting for subsequent citations of the same source in the Notes-Bibliography system?

A: Yes, in the Notes-Bibliography system, the first citation of a source provides full bibliographic details. Subsequent citations of the same source can be shortened to include the author's last name, a shortened version of the title, and the page number. If consecutive notes refer to the same source and page, you can use "Ibid." (meaning "in the same place").

Q: How do I handle multiple authors in Chicago style citations?

A: For the Notes-Bibliography system, for two authors, list both names in the note and bibliography. For three or more authors, list only the first author's name followed by "et al." in notes, but list all authors in the bibliography if there are between two and ten authors; for more than ten, use the first author followed by "et al." In the Author-Date system, for two authors, use both names in parenthetical citations. For three or more authors, use the first author's last name followed by "et al." in parenthetical citations.

Q: What is the primary purpose of the bibliography or reference list in Chicago style?

A: The primary purpose of both the bibliography and the reference list is to provide a comprehensive and organized record of all the sources consulted and cited within the essay. This allows readers to verify the information presented, locate the original sources for further research, and understand the foundation upon which the author's arguments are built.
